CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

Olivia Barnett-Nagshineh is a social anthropologist with a research focus on gender, emotions, food systems and environments in postcolonial contexts. She examines the legacies of colonisation on contemporary economies, including commercial determinants of health in Jamaica and the commodification of food and social life in Papua New Guinea. In her research and activist work, she aims to learn and think about alternatives to the destructive, dehumanising and apocalyptic system of colonial capitalism—taking inspiration and learnings from the market women of Goroka, Papua New Guinea. Her recent book Economies of Care: Market Women in Highlands of Papua New Guinea (Bloomsbury, 2025) is part of this process.

Kerryn Sogha Galokale is a Melanesian educator from Bareho Village (Western Province) and Loloko Village (Choiseul Province) in Solomon Islands. She holds a PhD in Pacific Studies from the University of Auckland, a Master of Education from Massey University, and a Bachelor of Education from Pacific Adventist University (Papua New Guinea). With nearly a decade of teaching experience in Solomon Islands schools and universities, Kerryn’s research interest focuses on education, Indigenous languages, faith and empowerment, Pacific research methodologies, Pacific climate change research and Melanesian marketing.

Meleisea Leasiolagi Malama Meleisea is Emeritus Professor of Samoan Studies at the National University of Samoa and former director of Pacific Studies at the University of Canterbury (1988–1993) and the University of Auckland (1993–1998). In addition, between 1998 and 2012 he led regional and national programmes for UNESCO based successively in Thailand, Afghanistan and Bangladesh. He is a historian and has published numerous books on Samoan history, particularly the influential book The Making of Modern Samoa: Traditional Authority and Colonial Administration in the History of Western Samoa (University of the South Pacific, 1987). He is the 2025 recipient of the Nayacakalou Medal from the Polynesian Society.

Matthew Nickless (Tangata Tiriti) is a historian and museum professional based at Tāmaki Paenga Hira|Auckland War Memorial Museum. He works with the Online Cenotaph team where he provides research support and writes on New Zealand military history. He holds a Master of Arts in History from Waipapa Taumata Rau|The University of Auckland, where he wrote his thesis titled “Through the Red Lens: Constructed Perceptions of Māori as a Violent Race, 1857–1873”. In it he investigated how race was invoked to stoke fear and justify the invasion of Waikato.

Antony Vavia is of Cook Islands descent from the islands of Miti’āro and Mangaia, and Fijian descent from the island of Taveuni. Based in Rarotonga, Cook Islands, he is a lecturer for his alma mater, Te Wānanga Aronui o Tāmaki Makau Rau|Auckland University of Technology (AUT). His current research interests focus around the relationship between Pacific coastal environments and Pacific communities, exploring where local ecological knowledge, practices and marine science can be used to support resource management and food security.
